

I do not feel served by media conglomeration. As illustrated in the case of radio, when the industry is deregulated, smaller, unique voices are squeezed out in favor of bland, generic, soulless, corporatized "junk food" content. An open marketplace of ideas is important to our culture and our democracy. These are the people's airwaves, not the corporations' and the FCC should serve to protect the peoples' interest, not the corporations'. People are served by having a wider variety of choices and a diversity of voices. Removing the ownership protections will destroy this diversity, so I urge you to keep them in place.
